Key VALUES

Confidentiality

We respect the client's privacy and work at building trust through confidentiality – information is not shared without the client's written consent. However, there are exceptions to this rule, as outlined by the American Psychological Association's (APA) Code of Ethics. For instance, imminent danger to harm self or others, reports of abuse, neglect, etc.

Professionalism and Integrity

EAP staff holds to the highest standards of personal and professional conduct. We work to provide the most current information through ongoing research, study and continuing education.

Customer Care

Respect and compassion for clients is foremost at Parkview. We are committed to providing quality customer care while continually striving to exceed the expectations of our clients.

The focus at EAP is to meet the individual's specific needs as well as reinforce the notion that conflict is natural in all aspects of life. Developing new or different ways of coping is the objective of treatment.

Management supports and encourages their employees to seek treatment, so there is no fear of "will this affect my job" or retaliation. Your work performance will determine your future.
